Many mini-games involve challenges spinning constantly on the floor, including a revolving platform or a huge, spinning hammer. Platforms will adjust the player’s location either by following or collapse game physics. Some mini-games have teamwork elements. Mini-games focused on rivalry include paying participants towards the finish line. The remaining players will be disqualified until a specified amount of players cross the finish line. Most persistent barriers stand in the middle of the obstacle course, delaying the path to the finish line. Wide moving objects continue to pursue the finishing line path, avoiding players who clash with them for temporary purposes. Interactive platforms are often an additional challenge to navigate through the course of obstacles. Check points are available across the obstacle path for players to continue the obstacle path.
