I try to be intentional, especially at this time of year, about giving thanks. That might seem quaint given the, well, almost two-year pandemic. But sometimes gratitude can be paradoxical like that: it's easier to recognize the good when you're also working through the hard. I continue to be moved by your lives and the difference you are making in the world. A great part of our job is to meet you now and project forward the impact you might have in various industries, organizations, and communities. Given who you are, that's an exercise that fills me with hope—and gratitude—about the future. Thank you for applying to HBS and for sharing your stories with us. In my reflection today, I also recognize and thank my colleagues and friends on the MBA Admissions and Financial Aid team. I remember when I was in your shoes that it was hard to imagine who was on the other side of the application process. Let me pull back that curtain for you: they are real, wonderful people who have experienced some of the same losses, anxieties, and challenges—and yes, some joys too!—of the past two years. Through it all, they have gone to truly extraordinary lengths to support you in your journey to HBS despite the many disruptions of the pandemic. I feel lucky to work with such a dedicated team and hope you have been surrounded by similarly supportive colleagues. Happy Thanksgiving. 22 Oct 2021 Our MBA program features many different ways of learning—from small group discussions, simulations, project-based work, and hands-on experiences—but HBS is famous for pioneering the case method. This year marks 100 years since the first Harvard Business School case was published in 1921—check out this timeline. When I was in your shoes, the case method is something that made me excited about applying to HBS. As a student, I found the case method the ideal way to learn about leadership, business, and general management. In addition to being incredibly engaging, the case method centers the diverse experiences of every student in the class allowing you to learn deeply not just from faculty, but also from your classmates. I also loved when leaders of the companies we discussed in the cases joined our class to share their insights. Just before the pandemic hit, we filmed a case discussion with Professor Tsedal Neeley and a section of HBS students. Check it out here. If you find yourself excited about this way to learn after this ten minute video, I hope you'll apply to HBS! 01 Oct 2021 Over the past few weeks, we have had the pleasure of reading your Round 1 applications. I distinctly remember how much effort—and heart—goes into putting together an application. On behalf of the whole team, thank you for what you have shared with us. On Tuesday, October 5 at 12:00 noon Eastern Time, each of you will receive individual news on next steps in our process. There are three possibilities: Invite to interview – this is good news! Further consideration – also positive! This is a small group of strong applicants that we ask to wait with us until Round 2, at which point we will review your application again. More info on this process will be shared with you directly if you receive “further consideration” news. Early release – unfortunately we are not able to move you forward in the process. This part of our work never gets any easier, but our hope is that by letting you know this news early on in the process you can move forward with other plans. If you are invited to interview, you will receive access to our Interview Information website on October 5 to learn more about the process – you will then be able to sign up for an interview on October 6. 29 Sep 2021 The 2+2 application is now open in our application portal! The HBS 2+2 program is a deferred admission process for current students in their final year of study, either in college or full-time master's degree programs. If you are admitted through 2+2, you work for 2-4 years in a field of your choosing before enrolling at HBS in the regular HBS MBA Program. We hope that knowing you have a spot at HBS on the horizon will enable you to really explore early on in your career as you build toward a life of impact. The 2+2 application deadline is not until April 28, 2022, so you have some time. We only review applications after this date. There is a reduced application fee of $100, and we will also open a 2+2 need-based application fee waiver in January 2022. In the meantime, check out the 2+2 website for more information and introduce yourself to us so we can keep you informed about upcoming HBS events for college students.
