I like rap. It's probably not good for fishing.

I listen to rap when I go fishing too! What kind of rap do you listen to?

Really? I am from the south so I like trap music.

I'm from the south too! I live in Louisiana. What part of the south are you from?

Driving is fun! I like to listen to music while I drive. What do you listen to?

I listen to hiphop tracks. I like 50 cent. You have an hiphop fav?

I don't have a hip hop favorite, but I do have a country favorite. Do you have a favorite?

I'm from the midwest, but I live in the south now. How about you?

Born and raised in the south

What part of the south? I was born in Georgia, but raised in Tennessee

I'll have to check it out. Are there any other indie survival games that you like?

Denis Bouquet Mac had a new SSD and received a crash icon on several files. You can right-click and grab the lock, but it's a slow process. Here is a command line how to unlock multiple files on a Mac using an open terminal (startup program/application/helper/terminal), add this command to the chflags -r nauchg ~/documents request, and you can use different locations. For example: chflags -r nauchg ~/complaints hope this helps. Sharmouse can synchronize the blocking and unlocking it on several computers: a video display of any computer is prevented, all other Mac and Windows computers can be avoided. This was also blocked. Turn on lock/lock sync in software and settings on all computers. The ShareMumuse software then runs quietly, working in the background. If a computer is disabled, Sharmouse displays the countdown of all other computers and shuts it down after a grace period. It not only works in Windows. More than sync and blocking and blocking and unlocking and unlocking will not sync and sync blocking, but also allows you to share any computer's mouse and keyboard with another computer on desktop: my system setup is: LVM (and of course the unencrypted install section). The Debian system is installed there. During the pilot I tried using two HDDs, Dropbear-Initramp, which were collected as RAID0 with performance and LVM to unlock the deluxe overhaul during the remote. This usually works to unlock the first LUCS device (in SSD with a Debian system loaded): I introduce a system with SSH in a Dropbear/busy box. I use Cypatroot-Naubs Zipper, but on the lock, but on the lock, but but For the lock, but for the lock, but to mirror the second Lux device (in RAID0), I still need a console. Is there a way to unlock both devices (or one by one) using Dropbear-Initramps/Bank Box? Tia! April 22, 2012 12:46 Denis Buket Mac was a new SSD and some files were the main symbol. It is possible to check the lock and cut the connection, but it is a slow process. This team is a command line to unlock multiple files on Mac using the terminal terminal (Start/Application/Utilities/Terminal) to copy and add this command to Chflags -r -r -r tuchg ~/documents ~/. Debian was founded there. Two HDDs were installed as RAID0 with loops and LVM, and I tried to use Dropbear-RAMFS for some data from a distance to unlock the lamp device. April 22, 2012, 12:46 in response to Yoezr, you can also do this in the Finder, one folder at a time. To do this, open one of the following folders. Press -A (select all from the Edit menu). Press Option-Command-I to open multi-item information, which is a general window for all selected items. Then click on the "Locked" field until it's empty. This should unlock all selected items. Switch to main content APFS volumes. If your computer has volumes APFS, unlocking will not work on your computer. Try instead. Unlock Description Allows the system to unlock and mount encrypted primary storage volumes at boot time. In other words, it allows you to log in as a user whose home directory is free on an encrypted subdisk. About what? Like many power users, my MacBook has two devices. My boot amount is on the SSD and all my home component is on the second drive. FileVault 2 for Mac OS X Lion supports boot and mount, but does not support unlocking other volumes while the user is logged on. inside and outsideThe user must only access himself. This program solves this problem by unlocking basic storage volumes (like my home hard drive) without requiring another user account. In short, it allows me access as usual. Install run it in terminal. Curl -I | Bash will ask for a password. Follow the instructions. The installation script finds all encrypted core storage volumes connected to the computer (ignore the startup volume). It then checks the volumes found and asks if you want to unlock the volume at startup. When you do, you'll be prompted for the passphrase used to unlock that volume. Everything should be fine! Restart your computer and access to run the test. Run uninstall in the terminal (you will be prompted for a password) to remove all tracks from your system. Curl -I | Questions and answers about bash this encryption my album? No, this program only unlocks volumes at startup. Volumes must be encrypted before using this program. Where is the passphrase stored? The temporary passphrase is stored in an encrypted system key ring. Only users with administrative access to the computer can get the passphrase, but all users can unlock the volume (see next question). I am user A. What happens if user B grants access? Will my home unit be installed? Yes, it will. The program doesn't know who's accessing, and I don't know of any other way to let him know, other than making him the user's Launchdaemon that doesn't work. A pull request implementing this would be welcome. Is my data really safe? YES. Because the system key ring is tied to its system, the unit cannot be removed from the computer and unlocked with another computer. Only your system users can unlock the volume, and even then, built-in security prevents non-administrative users from receiving the data. Does it work after updates? Yes, this program continues to work even after updates. Since Apple doesn't remove LaunchDaemons during updates, the program still runs at the beginning. And because the program uses an API supported by Apple, the program will continue to work. What if Apple fixes the bug? If Apple fixes the bug, the program will not break or interfere in any way. In the worst case, given the behavior of the program, a message will appear in the console logs. Do the script and everything is back to normal. Problems? If you have a problem, send an error message or fix it and submit a download request. Miro.com/changelog.
