

☐

I'm not robot

reCAPTCHA

Continue

Romeo and juliet movie 1996 full movie online free

Get all the best moments in pop culture & entertainment delivered to your inbox. 1 What Is the Function of the Apex of the Heart? 2 What Are Brands of Gum That Won't Stick to Dentures? 3 What Animal Does Pepperoni Come From? 4 What Are the Different Types of Microcomputers? 5 What Are Recreational Activities? 1 How Many Lakhs Does It Take to Make a Crore? 2 How to Find and Use Coupon Codes for Online Shopping 3 Small-Screen Star Power: These Are TV's Top-Earning Actors, Ranked 4 All About Bulldozers 5 Where Are Chia Seeds in the Grocery Store? Love 'Pricks Like a Thorn' In Act 1, Scene 4, Romeo says that love "pricks like a thorn." When he says this, Romeo questions whether love is as tender and soft as people claim it is. He says that love is painful and rough. He is not optimistic about love when he says this. He knows how much love can hurt. Lovers' Tongues Are 'Like Softest Music' In Act 2, Scene 2, Romeo claims that "lovers' tongues" are "like softest music to attending ears." In this passage, Romeo says that lovers saying each other's names throughout the night is reminiscent of sweet music. He says that hearing a lover say his name would be like hearing soft music. When he uses this simile, he shows the beauty of love. This simile contrasts with some of Romeo's earlier opinions about love. Early in the play when he is heartbroken, Romeo talks poorly about love. In similes like this one, he speaks more highly of it. This makes it clear that his opinion changes based on the situation. Juliet Is 'Like a Rich Jewel' In Act 1, Scene 5, Romeo sees Juliet and describes her. He says, "It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night, like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear." In this simile, Romeo compares Juliet to a jewel sparkling against darkness. In many cases, Shakespeare uses similes to describe Juliet's rich beauty from Romeo's point of view. Juliet's Love Is 'as Boundless as the Sea' In Act 2, Scene 2, Juliet uses a simile to describe her love. She says, "My bounty is as boundless as the sea." In saying this, Juliet expresses that her love does not have a limit. It is deep. She also describes her love as her "bounty," which is a term often used to describe agriculture. Her love is like a generous gift from the earth. She uses this language to describe her passion and its roots. Romeo Describes the Joy of Love as 'Schoolboys From Their Books' In Act 2, Scene 2, Romeo describes the joy of love. The verse says, "Love goes toward love, as schoolboys from their books." He says that lovers who are together feel as happy as students who are leaving school. He follows that up with "But love from love, toward school with heavy looks." In this statement, Romeo is saying that two lovers leaving each other is akin to students being forced to return to school. In using this comparison, Romeo is saying that leaving Juliet is like having to return to a place he hates with a heavy heart. 1 Quite the Cost: Expensive Mistakes Made Throughout History, Ranked 2 Tips and Tricks for Making Driveway Snow Removal Easier 3 Who Is the Real John Q. Archibald and How Long Was He Imprisoned? 4 Flight Etiquette: What to Do and Not Do on an Airplane 5 Is the World Ready to Move Away From Coal? 1 The Benefits and Drawbacks of a Growing Population 2 Financing the Future: Setting Up Savings Plans for Grandchildren 3 What Are Push Notifications? 4 The Greatest Singers of All Time, Ranked 5 Strange Americana: Why Is There a 75-Foot-Tall Statue of Elon Musk in Tulsa Oklahoma? 1 Quite the Cost: Expensive Mistakes Made Throughout History, Ranked 2 Tips and Tricks for Making Driveway Snow Removal Easier 3 Who Is the Real John Q. Archibald and How Long Was He Imprisoned? 4 Flight Etiquette: What to Do and Not Do on an Airplane 5 Is the World Ready to Move Away From Coal? William Shakespeare created one of the most memorable tragedies in literary history with Romeo and Juliet. It's a tale of star-crossed lovers, but they were destined to come together only in death. Of course, if you loved Romeo and Juliet, you'll probably love the other plays by Shakespeare. But there are a number of other works you'll likely enjoy as well. Here are a few books you must read. Our Town is an award-winning play by Thornton Wilder--it's an American play that's set in a small town. This famous work encourages us to appreciate the little things in life (since the present moment is all we have). Thornton Wilder once said, "Our claim, our hope, our despair are in the mind - not in things, not in 'scenery.'" Seamus Heaney's translation of Sophocles' Antigone, in The Burial at Thebes, brings modern touches to the age-old tale of a young girl and the conflicts she faces--to fulfill all the demands of her family, her heart, and the law. Even when faced with certain death, she honors her brothers (paying them last rites). Ultimately, her final (and very tragic) end is similar to the culmination of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet. Fate... fate... Many have loved this novel, Jane Eyre, by Charlotte Bronte. Although the relationship between Jane and Mr. Rochester is not usually considered star-crossed, the couple must overcome incredible obstacles in their desire to be together. Ultimately, their shared happiness seems almost fated. Of course, their love (which seems to be a union of equals) is not without consequences. The Sound of the Waves (1954) is a novella by Japanese writer Yukio Mishima (translated by Meredith Weatherby). The work centers around the coming-of-age (Bildungsroman) of Shinji, a young fisherman who is in love with Hatsue. The young man is tested--his courage and strength eventually win out, and he's allowed to marry the girl. Troilus and Criseyde is a poem by Geoffrey Chaucer. It's a retelling in Middle English, from Boccaccio's tale. William Shakespeare also wrote a version of the tragedy story with his play Troilus and Cressida (which was partially based on Chaucer's version, mythology, as well as Homer's Iliad). In Chaucer's version, Criseyde's betrayal seems more romantic, with less intent than in Shakespeare's version. Here, as in Romeo and Juliet, we're focused on the star-crossed lovers, while other obstacles come to play--to tear them apart. Wuthering Heights is a famous Gothic novel by Emily Bronte. Orphaned as a young boy, Heathcliff is taken in by the Earnshaws and he falls in love with Catherine. When she chose to marry Edgar, passion turns dark and full of vengeance. Ultimately, the fall-out of their volatile relationship affects many others (reaching even beyond the grave to touch the lives of their children). Many lovers of literature would crown Romeo of house Montague the prince of romance. Others believe that he's a hormone-ravaged, short-sighted twirp who kills himself four days after meeting a pretty girl. A fellow teacher is currently directing Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, and his main goal is to take the play to schools around Southern California to illustrate not a classic love story, but a tale of irrational and deadly decision making. Of course, if we only watched perfectly sensible characters, the theater would no longer have tragedies! So, perhaps we can all agree, Romeo is fatally impetuous. However, the question remains: Is Romeo in love? Or is it just infatuation? Looking at some of Romeo's most significant monologues might help you make up your mind about his character. In this Act One monologue, Romeo laments his failures in love. He has been spurned by Rosaline, and now acts as though his heart will never mend. (Of course, in just a few scenes he will meet Juliet and change his opinion!) Alas, that love, whose view is muffled still, Should, without eyes, see pathways to his will! Where shall we dine? O me! What fray was here? Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all. Here's much to do with hate, but more with love. Why, then, O brawling love! O loving hate! O any thing, of nothing first create! O heavy lightness! serious vanity! Misshapen chaos of well-seeming forms! Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health! Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is! This love feel I, that feel no love in this. Dost thou not laugh? (Note: Romeo and Benvolio exchange a few lines and the monologue continues.) Why, such is love's transgression. Grievs of mine own lie heavy in my breast, Which thou wilt propagate, to have it prest With more of thine: this love that thou hast shown Dost add more grief to too much of mine own. Love is a smoke raised with the fume of sighs; Being purged, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes; Being vex'd a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears: What is it else? a madness most discreet, A choking gall and a preserving sweet. When Romeo and his buddies crash the Capulet party, he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright! It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night Like a rich jewel in an Ethiop's ear; Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear! So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows, As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. The measure done, I'll watch her place of stand, And, touching hers, make blessed my rude hand. Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight! For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night. And then we have the most famous speech in Romeo and Juliet. Here, Romeo sneaks onto the Capulet estate and gazes up at the beautiful girl on the balcony. But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks? It is the east, and Juliet is the sun. Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon, Who is already sick and pale with grief, That thou her maid art far more fair than she: Be not her maid, since she is envious; Her vestal livery is but sick and green And none but fools do wear it; cast it off. It is my lady, O, it is my love! O, that she knew she were! She speaks yet she says nothing: what of that? Her eye discourses; I will answer it. I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks: Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven, Having some business, do entreat her eyes To twinkle in their spheres till they return. What if her eyes were there, they in her head? The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars, As daylight doth a lamp; her eyes in heaven Would through the airy region stream so bright That birds would sing and think it were not night. See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand! O, that I were a glove upon that hand, That I might touch that cheek! Shakespeare meets Dr. Seuss in Peter Bloedel's The Seussification of Romeo and Juliet. The playwright has taken Dr. Seuss's iconic rhyming tetrameter format and rewritten those famous star-crossed lovers into a one-act play. All of the memorable moments from the three-hour Shakespearean saga are present: The prologue, Juliet's betrothal to Paris, Romeo crashing the Montague's (here Monotone's) party, the nurse discovering Romeo's identity, the tower (balcony) scene, Romeo and Juliet eloping in secret, Tybalt and Mercutio's fight scene, Romeo's banishment, Juliet faking her death, and Romeo finding her in her tomb. There is, however, a twist ending that he spies upon the beautiful young Juliet. He is instantly smitten. Here's what he has to say while he gazes from afar: What lady is that, which doth enrich the hand Of yonder knight? O, she doth teach the torches